The travels of a modern woman Von Ronald Bird You will enjoy travelling with this modern woman. She wasn't the first woman to reach high academic achievement, although she did and was a forerunner in the era of the new woman. Her travels described here reflect the life of the new woman too, one who is: freed from domestic tasks; now unattached; entitled to travel; interested; and nurturing the belief that exploring the world is for women too. Enjoy.

KurzbeschreibungAnthropologist and StoriesWork founder, Lenora Ucko, takes you with her on exciting trips to Cuba, Sierra Leone, Pakistan, Egypt, Haiti and more. Traveling alone brought her invitations to settings often closed to most travelers, for example, special medical establishments, private family discussions, and the unique world of women. This delightful account is more than an inspiring testament to her sense of independence and adventure. Her experiences highlight what unites and distinguishes us all, and offer intriguing stories in cross-cultural perspective.
