Kundenrezensionen Hilfreichste Kundenrezensionen 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. You would not be able to put this book down. Von Ein Kunde This book is about an eleven-year-old boy named Bailey

Trumbull. All of the kids at school called him a coward because every time he heard or saw a firecracker, he would run off jumping as high as a kite. Even his own brothers made fun of him and thought that he would jump at almost anything. Bailey hated the 4th of July. But it was on the 4th of July when Bailey was at the carnival in Abilene. He went to see a medicine man. The medicine man kind of stepped back when he saw him, but he had given him an astonishing prophecy: "Some men spend all of their life searching for who they are, you'll see yourself in the eye of the great bear. Bailey didn't know what he meant. Bailey didn't worry about it, for his daddy had gotten heatsickness, and the family had to move to Montana. Then his whole life had changed, everything had become so topsy-turvy. His whole life had changed. Except for when he went to school, everything was the same. Everybody had still made fun of him, and the "sissy" reputation had stuck to him. It stuck to him everywhere he went. Until one day, the medicine's man prophecy came true, and Bailey had to make a decision that risked his life. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. This was the best I've ever read. Von Ein Kunde I loved it. Enough said

Kurzbeschreibung Dubbed a "coward" by the bullies in his school, Bailey will prove his courage when his family moves from Texas to Montana and he faces down a grizzly bear in order to save his own sister, in a turn-of-the-century adventure. Original. From School Library Journal Grade 4-7-A surefire winner of a tale. Bailey, 11, is mortified that he reacts to firecrackers or other loud noises by jumping. He's branded a coward by the boys at school as well as his brothers, all of whom take delight in tormenting him. Bailey and his father set out to "cure" him of this problem until his leaping ability saves his life during an encounter with a rattlesnake. At the Fourth of July celebration, the medicine man who is telling fortunes predicts that Bailey will see himself "in the eye of the great bear." The summer of 1898 wears on filled with farm work and a few adventures. The merciless Texas sun proves too much for Bailey's dad, who suffers from a bout of heat sickness, but he refuses to heed the doctor. After a long conversation behind closed doors, his parents reach a compromise and the family heads for Montana where more experiences and the foretold great bear await them. The author has created characters whom readers come to know and care about. He has spun a story filled with small escapades interspersed with heart-stopping excitement and terror. He shows that everyone has a trait they wish they didn't have, and teaches two very important lessons: that courage comes in a lot of different forms and that one does what one must do. This story will be an excellent read-aloud as the chapters are episodic cliff-hangers. Nancy P. Reeder, Heathwood Hall Episcopal School, Columbia, SC Copyright 1999 Reed Business Information, Inc.
