Gould in Harvard palaeontology but yet he does not share his opinions. He is an advocate of creation instead evolution. He is professor and director of the Center for Origins Research and Education. In his book he examines the biblical fundamentals for God as the creator and restorer of life as well as his character. He emphasizes that the creator is the only one who can tell how it all started. He must be one hundred percent reliable. He also says that as a scientists it would be very easy to invent any number of theories to explain the age of universe according to the different ideologies, from Theism to Pantheism or Christian concepts.He says that the status of the word of God, the belief in the nature of God are decisive towards all other models. Scientific explanations are based on a certain understanding. If this understanding is wrong, everything else breaks together. The claims of the Scripture are the starting point. On this our understanding of the world should be based because it is the only reliable source we can have. The creation can only show how it is composed not why or how it started. This can only the creator. No creator no creation.In his book he presents the picture of a young earth creation model to help creationists to include their special field in the overall frame. The book does not attack evolution theory, but carves out a creational model. It is a comprehensive study on scientific level.

KurzbeschreibungDarwinian theories of the universe, although mostly rejected by evangelical Christians, have still found their way into creation theology. A concept such as evolutionist creation has watered down much of the Bibles teaching in order to reconcile with popular tenants of science. The whole controversy swirls around the age of the universe.KurzbeschreibungDarwinian theories of the universe, although mostly rejected by evangelical Christians, have still found their way into creation theology.
