Fiction or TruthVon Ein KundeAlthough this book is in the Genre of Fiction, many incidents mentioned in this novel actually took place. I know because not only am I the author, but I traveled with dozens of these men across North America for ten years. The Last Train Home caused me to stop and think. Guardian Angels must have been protecting this man.

Could this take place in our society today? The answer soon became very positive. Yes this could and possibly has taken place. An American soldier Missing In Action and believed dead, survives the vicious jungles in Vietnam 5 years. The dangerous journey back home leads to heartbreak when he discovers his wife has married his best friend and his son is happy with the only father he has ever known. Events leading up to the climax touches the most calloused of hearts.

KurzbeschreibungI spent the latter part of the 1980's traveling across North America as a hobo in a boxcar. I didnt consider myself to be a true hobo because I worked in just every town I spent a little time in. I witnessed the real side of America most people would never see. I met many homeless people while traveling across the United States. A large number of them were veterans from the Vietnam War. Some of these modern day vagabonds were once high ranking Army officers. I met lieutenants, captains and even a major. These men were not able to adjust to a normal life after the atrocities they were involved in during the war. I was so moved by what their stories I decided to write about them. I may not have witnessed angels with halos like they are portrayed in Hollywood movies but, I have felt their presence on many occasions. I have felt the presence especially near when my life was in danger. Can an animal be an angel? You might be surprised at what I found out. I feel certain you might learn things about these heavenly visitors that may surprise you.
