Book that approaches to first day in school in a way that will make children fear and nervousness to disappear Von Helpful Advice The Pout-Pout Fish Goes to School written by Deborah Diesen and full of beautiful artwork made by Dan Hanna is another book for children that deals with a day everybody remembers all their lives, and in a few weeks will be experienced by a new generation - the first day of school. This book is part of A Pout-Pout Fish Adventure series which introduced cute character of Mr. Fish who from one book to another with his adventures teaches and entertains children. At the beginning of the story reader will find Mr. Fish wandering around the school, trying to find his classroom- When he will enter the room in which higher grades students are dealing with tasks too difficult for a new student, Mr. Fish will begin to feel lost and hopeless. But fortunately the right teacher will come and Mr. Fish together with all his classroom buddies will be filled with confidence and faith in them realizing that the school was not difficult, but fun place where you can also learn a lot. The Pout-Pout Fish Goes to School somehow instantly reminded me of Chu's First Day of School I read few days ago, both being beautifully illustrated and nicely told stories with which children will be easy to identify. ; everyone remember how nervous was the first day in school and regardless of other people encouraging it seemed to us that the first day of school is something the hardest we will ever do. The book is full of humor and positivity helping children to accept school not as a place where they will be asked something all the time, but a place where they can and will feel pleasant, socialize with colleagues and learn many useful things. Diesen book would be great to read aloud, but besides educating story Dan Hanna made a great job with book illustrations which are made in soft colors, introducing some humorous posters and quotes from fish book classics. Overall, The Pout-Pout Fish Goes to School is a great book for preschool children that approaches this serious topic for children in a way that will make their fear and nervousness to disappear, providing confirmation that school is truly a beautiful place.
